Will a large-scale energy storage system be needed?

No matter how much generating capacity is installed, there will be times when wind and solar cannot meet all demand, and large-scale storage will be needed. Historical weather records indicate that it will be necessary to store large amounts of energy (some 1000 times that provided by pumped hydro) for many years.

Should acaes be used for energy storage?

The 10 GWh needed to compress the air generates some 9.7 GWh of thermal energy, of which only 7.5 GWh is needed to support electricity storage: using the excess for other purposes, such as district heating, would improve utilisation of the input energy and generate revenue which could be offset against the cost of using ACAES to store electricity.

Are hydrogen and ammonia a viable option for storing power?

Hydrogen and ammonia are technically viable options for storing power, although the round-trip efficiencies are low, and the costs are high. Hydrogen production is already fully commercialised for some electrolyser types. Hydrogen end-use technologies are still developing.
