Will Mercuria buy Vostok oil?

Dunand said that while Mercuria would continue to invest in fossil fuel projects it would not back large ventures such as Vostok Oil, the huge arctic oil venture that Russian oil company Rosneft is developing. Trafigura has already taken a 10 per cent stake in the project, while a consortium led by Vitol is in talks about acquiring 5 per cent.

Why did Mercuria buy JPMorgan?

Unlike some of its peers, which are primarily focused on physical oil trading, Mercuria has also pushed into financing, offering clients complex services more akin to those offered by investment banks. In 2014 it bought part of JPMorgan's physical commodities trading business to bolster its operations, particularly in power markets.
